BIOSKETCH (Brief Career Overview)

Dr. David Wolfe is Professor Emeritus in the School of Integrative Plant Science (Horticulture Section) at Cornell University (<https://cals.cornell.edu/david-w-wolfe>). His research has focused primarily on soil health and water management, and climate change solutions for managed and natural ecosystems. Soon after joining the Cornell faculty in 1984, his projects expanded beyond a US focus, to also address environmental and food security challenges in East Africa and Asia. In addition to peer-reviewed research publications, Dr. Wolfe has maintained a significant outreach program focused on producing resources for farmers in the US and abroad. Other science communication efforts include news media interviews, writing commentary for the popular press, and an award-winning soil ecology book for general audiences, Tales From the Underground: A Natural History of Subterranean Life. Interactions with policy-makers include co-authoring the 2008 and 2014 National Climate Assessments sponsored by the U.S. Global Change Research Program, and providing oral and written testimony at state and national government hearings. Teaching contributions have included courses such as “Climate Change and Food Security” and “Cropping Systems Ecology”, and serving on the Curriculum Committee for the Environment & Sustainability major. Dr. Wolfe retired from Cornell in 2021, and currently is Board Chair for the local non-profit Cayuga Lake Watershed Network (www.cayugalake.org), and a member of the Tompkins County Environmental Management and Water Resource Councils, and the Town of Lansing Conservation Advisory Council.
